Over a 6-year period, a prospective study was conducted in which all patients referred for musculoskeletal lesions with needle biopsy were enrolled. The technique used was based on 18G core biopsy needles (Monopty). A comparison was made with a retrospective analysis of all cases of musculoskeletal lesions with needle biopsy over a previous 5-year period. All cases from the prospective study were reviewed. The series of 5164 cases of needle biopsy included 2065 biopsies from patients with malignant disease and 3063 biopsies from patients with benign disease. Complications occurred in 46 cases (1.1%) and were usually minor. Malignant lesions were diagnosed in a case of bone metastases in a patient with breast carcinoma. Complications were noted in 47 cases (1.5%) of benign disease. Only 7 cases (0.2%) of malignant disease and 5 cases (0.2%) of benign disease required surgical biopsy due to diagnostic uncertainty and need for additional tissue. This prospective study confirmed that needle biopsy is a reliable and safe procedure for patients with musculoskeletal lesions.Antimicrobial resistance and microbial diversity of Escherichia coli isolated from bulk tank milk of buffalo farms.
