Most video streaming sites are secure as they encrypt the streams. However a problem with the security that many people don't think about is that most services will broadcast the source of your stream to anyone with an Internet connection. For example, if you enter your username and password on a video streaming site, they will send it to the owner of the video streaming site who can see it on your computer or IP address for the duration of your session. This can be avoided with certain sites by going into a section called "Private Room". You will have to enter a random string of numbers and letters to the left of the username, and to be sure you are in the correct section just type in the complete random string. This will prevent any of your other friends from watching it because you will not be able to see it on your computer or IP address. Unfortunately this won't stop hackers from seeing your stream if they are able to install spyware on your computer that can use your IP address to see it. According to a report by security company Palo Alto in September 2010, the main concern for anyone that has a computer on the internet is that they could be hacked by anyone else on the same WiFi network. If you are using your computer on a public WiFi, then anyone that is within range can see what you are doing. This is easy to fix, just disable WiFi on your laptop or whatever device you are using, and simply use a Ethernet adapter. This will allow you to use the internet on any device whether it is a laptop, tablet, or mobile phone. The same applies to your IP address, you are not always going to be on the same WiFi network. Even if you are on a public WiFi, simply going to a place that is not crowded like the park or a large coffee shop will have your IP address hidden. In conclusion, you
