AIM is a messaging and multi-purpose tool allowing you to stay in touch with your friends while playing online games or other activities. You can quickly sign in with your AIM or email address. One of the most used tools of AIM is the "buddy list". It lets you organize your contacts in different categories, such as Friends, Family, Acquaintances, etc. AIM provides you with a convenient way of chatting and sharing files. You can add contacts using your AIM or email address and you can link your Facebook account or your email address. In order to maintain privacy when sharing files, AIM encrypts the files you send or receive. AIM provides you with a comprehensive tool for browsing your contacts and messages. You can view your messages in a chronological order or read the content of your messages. Besides, you can view the contacts of your friends or colleagues and you can also add them to your contact list. Moreover, you can get notified about new messages and you can mark your messages as read or archived. AIM is the messenger tool you need in order to stay in touch with your friends. XChat is a very basic and free IM client, that allows you to chat online with your friends. There is a wide range of features, the most notable of which is that you are able to open multiple channels with multiple people. XChat Description: IMHO, this is the easiest and most user-friendly app among the rest. It's interface is easy to use and there are no distracting decorations. Once you install it, you'll probably want to run it every time you open your browser. All of the controls are intuitive and you'll get a feel for them in a matter of minutes. Chats are synchronous and you won't have to worry about timing when you're talking. The add and remove menu items make it pretty easy to add and remove people from your buddies list. Advanced features include the ability to add custom emoticons to messages (if you've got the extra space), run macros, edit XChat's config file, import/export to/from MySQL, Zabbix, and Interbase, and a whole slew of third-party plugins. If you want to be able to add custom emoticons to messages, you'll need to use a browser that supports GreaseMonkey - the software, not the person.
