In an interview with Macworld, Photoshop team leader Chris Reilly listed a few items to keep an eye on in the future:

- Native GPU access: With the introduction of the Apple silicon for Macs, the team is working with Apple for an all-new vector graphics API (DNG) and shader-based communications protocol to establish native GPU access to Photoshop. This technology has been available in other products for a decade, and it's a positive sign that Apple and Adobe want to bring the feature to Photoshop.
- Open layers: To reduce the need for supporting an increasing array of low-level details in the underlying GPU APIs, the team looks to the wider vector graphics stack.

Get started on building your own Lightroom presets in the upcoming Adobe Lightroom CC 2020 update. In this tutorial by Jeffrey Rudell, you'll learn how to build custom presets to use in Lightroom and Photoshop back using the proprietary Adobe Preset Manager file. There's a lot of speculation about Adobe's future involving the anticipated launch of Photoshop and the newer native GPU APIs introduced by Apple. The latter, in particular, is exciting for Mac users, who have long demanded that Photoshop use the native APIs and not the older single-threaded applications that have been used in the past. With that in mind, how are those changes changing the look of the product, and is it making an impact on the direction of the product? The team has been busy testing native GPU access and is actively working on both macOS and Windows releases. Looking ahead, he noted that the team is mindful of its users' needs and wants a product that "just works", and that it is planning to make sure that the Photoshop experience is consistent between platforms. That means, as one example, that it will remove limits on the number of layers with masking.
