Achieving patient satisfaction in the ambulatory setting is challenging for office-based physicians. This quality improvement initiative sought to reduce visits to the preoperative clinic by patients scheduled for out-patient colonoscopy. A statistically significant improvement in colonoscopy readiness was achieved with this intervention. Over 30% of previously eligible patients were able to avoid a visit to the preoperative clinic and this was associated with a significant increase in annual revenue by our clinic. We hypothesize that patients were able to avoid a visit because they had more knowledge of their preoperative care and were more prepared to go to the scheduled appointment.
