I am totally confused by the "How to build and run an Android application" example of that guide. It contains the following commands to build and run the sample application: 1. Build the application 2. Run the application Can someone please tell me, how to do that? Below are the commands: > cd \ directory\ containing\ build\ android.bat > android build > cd \ directory\ containing\ build\ > android.bat [name of package] A: 1. Build the application 2. Run the application 1.) Build the application: You can build your application either from the command line, or by building your project in Eclipse with the Android SDK from within Eclipse. The Android SDK provides the tools to compile, package, and run your application. To build your project from the command line, enter the following: > cd \ directory\ containing\ build\ > android.bat If you want to build your project from within Eclipse, go to File -> New -> Android Project and choose Android Application. Give the project a name of hello_world, and select OK. Building your project in Eclipse creates a native application. This means that the application's code and resources are packaged into a single file called an APK. To make sure that your application will run on multiple devices, you should use the Android SDK build tools to package your application as an Android Application Bundle (AAPK). While it is possible to build an APK from your project directly from Eclipse, using Android SDK build tools is a better way to go. The Android SDK build
